

5. I wrote down what the person said on two small bits of green paper and then I sat down the next morning and wrote it out in longhand on pieces of A4 paper. I changed two small bits of it afterwards. I was given two names one I thought was Handy, when I picked it up on the phone and I discovered afterwards from watching the news that it was Hanvey, and the other was Stacey Bridgett's name, I had it spelt with one "T", but I discovered afterwards there were two "Ts" in it, so I changed that. Then, some short time afterwards I've written down in different coloured pen some of the questions that were being asked by the people in the area at the time for example the family. The questions I have written down were "Why were the police not doing something? Why were they there if they weren't going to help? Why did they allow this to happen? Why did they not intervene?" And then I have written down the number for the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland. I was thinking about contacting them but I didn't. I have also written "How many girls were in the group of Protestants?" but I don't know why I wrote that.

6. I ran [REDACTED] and I got her over and I talked to her about it. Because she was from the SDLP, I thought she was somebody who could help me because I knew it was a political hot potato, I knew it was something very dangerous, and either I was being used or this was something that was quite helpful, but I wanted to talk to her about it. I gave copies of the notes to her and she said she would give them to the Department of Foreign Affairs, who would feed it back into the system. And then I forgot all about that, and never heard anything more about it for some time. Then I met with [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] on 31 October 1997. Mr [REDACTED] is the chair of the Garvaghy Road Residents' Association. Ms [REDACTED] had received an anonymous call asking seemingly chasing up progress of the information that had been passed to me previously. The caller had told Ms [REDACTED] that he had already spoken to me. I was still unsure. I didn't know whether it was someone from Garvaghy Road Residents Association, who had put up the information and were now coming to see why I hadn't done something about it, or whether it was a genuine phone call from the police and they were wondering why I hadn't done something about it.

7. There is now produced and shown to me marked "SD1" a copy of the notes I made.
