On Sunday morning, the 27th April 1997 at about 1 30 am or 1 45 am I walked from my home to Mandeville Street, Portadown, with my friend Heidi Reaney, who lives in Brownstown. I was wearing a blue Levi jacket, blue jeans, navy blue Adidas 'T' shirt and black shoes. When we reached Mandeville Street I saw Heidi's boyfriend near to the phone. He is called Glenn, I don't know his second name, he called Heidi over and I walked over with her to where he was standing. I stayed there for about five minutes when I heard shouting coming from the town centre. I heard people shouting, "Come you fenian bastards," and "Come on then." I walked down towards the town centre to see what was going on. Heidi and her boyfriend stayed where they were at. I told her I would meet up again with her at the same place. I stopped at the roundabout thing in the centre of the town, at this time I could see people coming up from the bottom of the town, there was about 20 to 30 people about. The bulk of the people were across the street from Woodhouse Street to the street opposite it. I saw a Police landrover sitting near to the Alliance and Leicester Bank, I didn't notice any Police out on the street. There were loads of people running about and there was shouting and screaming. I heard things like, 'Come on then', 'Come ahead', being shouted. I realised there was a fight going on between Protestants and Catholics. I stayed at the roundabout thing for a couple of minutes and during that time I could hear bottles smashing. I walked on down towards the crowd, I walked down the centre of the street and then crossed over to the right hand side of the street as I was doing so I heard a woman screaming; she had her hair in a bob, it was brown, she was wearing a black jacket I think, she was down on her knees over a man who was lying on the street face downwards. He was lying near to Eastwood's Shop. She was screaming for help and an ambulance. I kept looking at the man all the time I walked over to the woman and the man, the woman said, "There's no point in it," to me. I knelt down and listened to his breathing, he sounded as if he couldn't get any air. During this time I saw the Police standing near the landrover on the opposite side of the street to where I was. When I heard his breathing I got scared and I thought that he had been hit hard and I got up, before I left the woman I heard someone say that there was an ambulance on its way. I walked up the left hand side of the street to Mandeville Street where I met up with Heidi again, her boyfriend was still there, Heidi and I left him there and walked home again. I was home again at ten minutes past two. I did not know anyone in the town centre because they were running everywhere and the only person I knew was Jimmy Gibson from [REDACTED], he was at the Winemark as you go out of town. This was on my way home.
