

Continuation Statement of ANDREA LOUISE McKEE

Robert Hamill, also if I would be able to approach Tracey on their behalf. They asked me if I could recall any of the names mentioned by Tracey, during her conversations at the gym, along with other more general questions about Tracey's character and her association with Robbie Atkinson and Alistair Harvey.

I remember a discussion about a telephone call but I can't remember any details, however I told the officers that Tracey had been quite openly telling people that Robbie Atkinson was looking after Alistair Harvey. The meeting lasted approximately 10-15 minutes.

A couple of day's later arrangements were made for Tracey to go to the police station to make a statement. I remember that my ex-husband offered to take her and that it was quite late in the evening, after Tracey had finished work in a local Chinese restaurant.

Tracey was very apprehensive, so to provide her with some support I went with her and was present throughout the statement taking process. There was a lady police officer called P39 along with Michael Irwin and John McAteer, who actually wrote down Tracey's account. Other than being there as a companion for Tracey, I played no part during the statement taking and had no conversation with any of the police officer's present.

Whilst at the police station I recall that Tracey did mention the telephone call made by Robbie Atkinson to Alistair Harvey but again I can't remember any details or how it came about.

At that time it never crossed my mind that I would become involved to the extent where I would have to make an alibi statement for Robbie Atkinson. However in October 1997, arrangements were made by Robbie for me to attend the office of a solicitor called Sean Hagan, where I again met with Michael Irwin.

I went on to provide a fabricated alibi statement, in which I falsely claimed that my husband had made a telephone call, from the home address of Robbie Atkinson.

I felt decidedly uncomfortable. What I had got involved in was just one bloody mess. There was very little conversation between Michael Irwin, and myself other than I recall him asking if I was there to make a statement. I said, "yes" and sat down.

After I had provided my statement, I had no further contact with Michael Irwin until he rang me some time in June 2000, after I had moved from Northern Ireland to [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Following our conversation he and another officer travelled to North Wales to see me. During our meeting I fully admitted that my original statement made to him in October 1997, was false. It was explained to me that the reason for the approach by Michael Irwin, at that time,
