

centre with his initials D. page 73916. A second man was lying not far from the first man. The second man was on the left side of the road and further up towards St Marks Church. That second man was Robert Hamill. I have marked his position on the map as 'RH', page 73916.

8. Mr D had two women with him. I cannot remember what they looked like but they were kneeling down beside him. The women were distressed and quite verbal but I cannot recall what they were saying. Mr D was face down on the road. He was semi conscious and he appeared to have a head injury. There was blood or some other liquid around his head. I think it was in his hair. I do not think he had any other injury. During the fracas there were about thirty people near Mr D. At one point, they were about two to three feet away. I had to take out my baton and physically push the crowd back. I could hear people in the crowd saying "I hope they die" but I did not see anyone trying to attack Mr D whilst he lay on the ground.
9. I then went over to check Mr Hamill and left D with the two women. Mr Hamill was unconscious and was lying either on his back or partly on his side. His head was pointing towards St Marks Church and I could hear that he was struggling with his breathing. I am trained in first aid and I put my hand on his back to turn him over into the recovery position. It was clear to me from the vibration I felt in his back as I moved him that he was definitely having difficulty breathing. I checked to see if there was anything in his mouth but there was not. There was glass around his head, which I think was broken bottles. I kicked the glass away from his head to avoid him cutting himself. I did not see any blood or any injury apparent on him. I remained with Mr Hamill and I think that Constable Adams was with me for some of that time.
10. There were several other people with Mr Hamill. One of those people said that she was Mr Hamill's cousin. I cannot recall what the woman looked like or what else she said but I remember telling her to keep him in the recovery position. I recognised a boy known to me as Rory Robinson amongst the crowd of youths. I would describe him as tall, thin and in his mid-teens. I cannot remember anything else about his appearance. I knew him from my general
